The New Barbarian and His World

The great British essayist Hilaire Belloc (1870-1955) has described the new barbarian in unforgettable terms:

"We sit and watch the Barbarian, we tolerate him;
in the long stretches of peace we are not afraid.
We are tickled by his irreverence,
his cosmic inversion of our old certitudes
and our fixed creeds refreshes us; we laugh.
But as we laugh we are watched
by large and awful faces from beyond;
and on those faces there is no smile."

It has been 2000 years since Christ came into the world. 20th century man has difficulty imagining what it must have been like before the dawn of Christianity - to live in a pagan world ruled by fear and superstition; a world without conscience, without mercy. A world where the barbarian waited at the gate to rape and pillage and trample all vestiges of civilization beneath his feet.

. . . . the New Barbarian . . no longer waits at the gate but lives amongst us. He has traded his loincloth for a white jacket or designer suit; his spear for a degree. He may even wear a smile - or at least the mask of a smile. He tells us what he is all about and what he intends to do and we tolerate him. We even welcome him into the public square, into the classroom and into our homes. We are not afraid! He tells us he has come for our children and we give them over to him. We dismiss with disdain those who sound the warning trumpet, calling them disturbers of the peace. We tranquilize our conscience and we laugh. We are not afraid!

Let us then have our fill of laughter now, for when the world of the New Barbarian comes, all the laughter will end. We will have entered the "Brave New World" and there will be no turning back.
